BURNS CALLED BY JURY

INDIANAPOLIS, April 26.—The attorneys entered here today in the afternoon before the Marion County Grand Jury of William J. Burns, head of the detective bureau which encompassed the arrests in the dynamite cases.

Burns was not examined. Prosecutor Baker declaring that he was not ready and did not care to have Burns examined at present, although the attorneys required his presence this forenoon.

Mr. Baker said: "I have the grand jury is going at this matter a little later. Possibly they believe that because I was in a hurry to get the books and records over from the basement of the Central Life building I was in a hurry to have the men examined. I do not wish this thing to go off half-cocked, and for that reason I told Mr. Burns I was not ready for him."

Burns, after leaving the grand jury room, said he was going to Chicago this afternoon. He appeared at the court house a few minutes after 4 o'clock. His attorney, William J. Burns, Jr., appeared.

As Burns was leaving the grand jury room he was followed by a group of men, some of whom were shouting "Burns, Burns, Burns." Burns was then escorted to the court house by a group of men, some of whom were shouting "Burns, Burns, Burns."

Cook is reported to have declared that he knew why the dynamite was hidden in the basement of the American Central Life building and where it was to have been used.

LOS ANGELES, April 26.—An arrangement for the speedy arraignment and trial of the dynamite cases.

RULES OPPOSED BY MARKET MEN

Clinton street but the fight of the market men against the new regulations which would restrict the sale of meat and poultry to dealers in the city is expected to continue today when the board of health meets in the city hall.

At present the regulations are allowed to sell their goods outside of the city on Saturdays and Sundays. The market men are willing to accept the new regulations on every day except Saturday, but they claim that it is impossible for them to be obliged to keep their goods under cover on that day.

Dr. Duggan of the board explained that the regulations were in the interest of public health and that it was necessary to restrict the sale of meat and poultry to dealers in the city. He said that the regulations were not intended to restrict the sale of meat and poultry to dealers in the city, but to restrict the sale of meat and poultry to dealers in the city.

LEADERS NEEDED: AUTHOR KISSED! SHIP AGROUND SAYS BOOKER T. 'T WAS R. H. DAVIS OFF THE CAPE

CHATHAM, April 20.—A three-masted schooner was sighted around five miles off, to the west of Porters Rife Lightship, early today, doing a zigzag of distress.

The life water returned before noon to Captain Kelley, accompanied that morning by the U. S. A. M. Steamer from St. John's Station, bound for Portsmouth. Captain Kelley said that he had drifted on the coast and feeling trouble with the big engine of coal he was carrying reversed himself back. At high tide the vessel came to anchor and proceeded on her course.

CHALONER TO FIGHT EX-WIFE

RICHMOND, Va., April 26.—Unless the former Princess Annelie Rives Frobenius waives her claim to a dower right in her estate, John Armstrong Chaloner, her divorced husband and author of "Ward Leamy Now," declared to-day that he would go into the courts and fight her demand for an annual allowance of $3,000. This allowance was pledged to the Princess from the Chaloner estate in compliance her alleged dowry rights in my property added to her alleged statement that she had loaned me $20,000 of her literary earnings, forces me to protect myself.

He Claim a Romance.

"It was many years ago that the divorce was granted, nearly sixteen years, and the Princess may have forgotten the facts, or her imagination may have run away with her, she being a writer of romances, for she never composed a greater romance than the statement that I borrowed $20,000 from her. I never borrowed so much as a dollar from her."

"The statement concerning the $20,000 is pure fiction. I had decided to let it pass at that and pass unquoted, but since she has seen fit to refuse to relinquish her alleged divorce, I have decided to let it pass to any attack upon my will in the interest of my demise, and since I have lost practically my entire capital, I subscribe."

various annuities such as the $5,000 allowance to the Princess Troubetzkoy, may two residuary legatees, namely, the University of Virginia and the University of North Carolina, for specific educational purposes.

May Fight Life Annuity.

"Unless the Princess Tronetskaya does so, I will relinquish her alleged dower rights in my real property, in regard to which she has no claim," he is reported to have said. "If she is not willing to sign a deed to the effect, I shall insist that she be taken outside, I shall persist in my demand that she become my duty to forswear, and I shall sue for the annuity of $2,000 for life."

SULLY IS ADVANCE

SULLY IS ADVANCE AGENT OF STRAW HAT

WASHINGTON, April 26. The first straw hat of the season was worn here today by a woman, the exact opposite of the woman in silhouette who was the accepted figure in the city for many a summer. Her dress was a simple, straight, black, knee-length affair, and her hair was pulled up in the traditional high, expensive, and uncomfortable pompadour.

MRS. ARMOUR UNDER KNIFE AT CHICAGO

CHICAGO, April 26.—Mrs. T. Eugene Armour, 56, wife of the Chicago meat packer, was today attacked with appendicitis. She was taken there a few days ago. According to reports from several sources, Mrs. Armour will be further operated. Armour is well known as a philanthropist.

OPEN CARS HAVE REACHED BROADWAY

NEW YORK, April 26.—It looked like summer to see the open cars running on Broadway. They were crowded too; everybody seemed to prefer them to the closed ones, which were stuffy and warm. The same condition existed on the Sagoy avenue line, where open cars were running.

"Can Those Too Old to Work and Sell the Meat to the Cannibals?"

This Suggestion Comes from an Indignant Citizen, Who Has Perhaps Read Swift

Copyright, 1911, by American-Journal Exchange

A great many readers have written about a short editorial presented a picture of a man too old to work, too strong for the hospital, etc., and asking what should be done with such a man.

Mr. Delahanty, signing "Moloch," writes a fierce and satirical letter which shows that he is stirred to his depths. This is what he says:

Editor AMERICAN:
Dear Sir—I merely offer this as a suggestion.
Let a number of our financial trusts, incorporate a trust, to be known as the Cannibal Produce Company. Then round up all of these unfortunates who have been shunted onto the siding, then yes, slaughter 'em and pack them into one-pound cans, and sell them to the Phil Islanders. The profits should be devoted to the improvement of the breed of rascals back home.

This is in reference to your editorial on the man sitting on the bench studying the toes of his boots, like our old friend, Mr.
Toots. Your truly,
MOLOCH.

That letter—the echo of righteous indignation—recalls a suggestion, exactly similar, made many years ago by the great Dean Swift, the man with the sharpest and bitterest pen in Great Britain.

He was the gentleman who, as Dean, was bothered by the simple peasants in Ireland gathering about his house to see the eclipse. They thought that natural respect for a Dean would make the eclipse do its best near the Dean's house.

The Dean, bored by the crowd, sent out word through his servant that the eclipse had been postponed by order of the Dean—and the simple people, believing, went home.

This same Swift, himself Irish and deeply moved by the wrongs of Ireland, wrote out a suggestion—perfectly seriously—for utilizing the flesh of young Irish children as food. He explained in detail how plentiful the children—infants especially—were, and how valuable the children could be made as a food product.

His bitter satire produced a good effect in England.

Our friend Mr. Delahanty may do some good with his suggestion published above. It is surely calculated to make men think.

It is outrageous to think that hundreds of thousands of old men, are treated as public opinion would not permit an old horse to be treated. Things DO improve, however. Not so very long ago, taking time at its true value, things were worse than now.

They did actually kill and eat the old and feeble in old times, and, within the lives of men living, savages in the far North used to take their old parents, seal them up in ice houses and leave them there to die. We at least do not eat the old or lock them up to die. We turn them adrift or lock them up to decay in poorhouses. Some prop-ress, you see, but not exactly perfection.

Probably Those That Fly Youngest—Among Human Beings—Will Fly Best

Therefore We Cannot Indorse Mr. Benelisha's Suggestion as to An Age Limit

Copyright, 1911, by American-Journal Exchange

Mr. Bernard Benelisha, who writes as secretary of an Aero Club, thinks that human beings should be forbidden to practice flying before they are twenty-one years old. Here is Mr. Benelisha's argument:

Editor AMERICAN:
Dear Sir—The recent accident to Mr. Ethan Allen Weinberg compels me to petition the AMERICAN to end "reckless slaughter" among persons who know or profess to know the art of aviation. While aviation has been more or less a need to this country, it has also been a death sickle to many a man who has attempted it.

A few days ago I read in the papers how the well-known aviator, Robert Hilliard and Leo Stevens, miraculously escaped death in the fall of their biplane.
Again I read of the accident which befell a nineteen-year-old youth (Ethan Allen Weinberg). who had attempted to fly for his pilot's license. I think a law ought to be passed prohibiting persons under twenty-one years of age to practice the art of aviation. The greater number of accidents have befallen those under the stated age above, and many a heartbroken parent is now mourning the loss of her son. I know that the AMERICAN is willing to aid me in my campaign to enact such a law, and I therefore petition the AMERI-CAN for the publication of this article, hoping that other persons might interest themselves in my campaign.

BERNARD BENELISHA.

It is said that men should be killed in learning to fly—but, as we have said before, the profit to the human race is worth the lives that it costs. We kill one hundred men at least, and usually many more, when we build a bridge across a great river. Accidents of one kind and another mean death for many in such building—but the bridge is necessary, and the lives must be lost.

How much better worth while is it to sacrifice a few lives, since it must done, in order to enable men to bridge with their flying machines the entire air space above us!

Boys in early childhood, of course, should not be allowed to practice flying—that is a matter for regulation by parents, but not for law-makers—at least not yet.

Whoever has been in the country has seen small robins, bluebirds and sparrows lying on the grass, victims of their first attempts to fly.
Yet nobody would say that a robin should not be allowed to try flying until he is full grown. If he waited until then he would never fly.

We are inclined to think that the very best air men of the future will be those that begin early, that accustom their nerves, their brains, their lungs, and their entire physical and mental makeup to great heights in early years.

The art of flying is going to modify men, change their breathing apparatus greatly, emphasize certain nervous functions, and an early start is necessary, especially now, when the whole thing is new.

Probably the time will come when young men, boys, perhaps, of ten or twelve, will make their first flight, learn to steer, and become "air pilots" under conditions of safety. There will be, or ought to be, national or international schools of flying, with stretches of water above which the young will practice, into which they will fall safely, if they must fall, and be rescued by waiting boats.

Meanwhile, while depicting every accident which happens, we feel it fortunate that there are men, young and old, have enough enthusiasm and ambitious enough to risk life for the development of a great and important discovery that will help all humanity.

How the Fly Spreads Death.

Did You Ever See a Fly Wipe His Feet?

Do You Know That It Is This Very Act Which Has Spread Many Fatal Epidemics?

Copyright, 1911, by American-Journal Exchange

I have probably watched a fly, three and again as he walked under doors across your ceiling and windows how he managed to do it; and yet it has never occurred to you that his very ability to perform that feat explains why he is the terrible menace that he is to spreading disease, household, throughout communities.

W. A. Cobb, of the National Geographic Society, has recently devoted considerable attention to the subject, and he shows, by a study of the fly's feet, just how he is soot can hang head downward from the ceiling, and why the circumstances that give him this power at the same time make him the great destroyer that he is, and one of man's most dangerous enemies.

In a word, the foot of the fly is a spongy, sticky, porous pad that clings like a sucker to any surface on which the fly sees slight. Its progress across any given surface is a struggle, little realized by the human observer, and the fly, in his course, leaves a track that bears a thousand and one germ which he has accompanied in his travels.

To keep up any sort of pediculation between the fly must stop to press his self again and again, "to get the mud of his shoes."

Now, the fly, when he walks, carries from the sole on each of his feet, a mass of matter where the fly alights, and in it incubates the germs that spread disease and death among mankind.

Mr. Cobb, in a direct fashion, of its performance of its duty, it can fly considerable distances at a high rate of speed. It quickly carried long distances by train, boats, steam, and auto, and so on.

"Dreadfully we see a fly, from feet or an animal, easily keep up a good pace. The wing muscles of a fly when worked are found to be in importance than those of any bird so far as animal."

"Most of our diseases are caused by invisible germs. These germs may be brought to us from some old person or whatever is large enough to carry them and keep the opportunity."

The Great Germ Transporter "Carrying this fact with what every one knows about flies, and we see at once the importance of this fly as carrier of human disease germs."

"The result of this simple piece of researching is so startling that it is even tracked by its own importance. It looks so incredible that we hesitate, disbelieving our own eyes."

"It seems incredible that men have gone on doing this thing for centuries, and yet are still doing it, for the facts are as plain as the nose on their faces. The consequences of our remaining ignorant are tremendous. We have been here been a mistake, however, and we must do better."

"One way to destroy this false security is to interest people in the habits and behavior of flies. The only way to know about flies the more clear it will become that they are among our worst enemies."

"Take, for instance, a view of a fly resting on glass and viewed from below, which constitutes the danger."

:: On the Border ::

By PERCY SHAW

O H, our hands were playing gladiators And our swords were flashing In the land of sweet disorder, Where the fluorescent dreams, We were fighting just for pleasure, For to while away our leisure, Till the welkin with his screams.

We remember in the forties The advances and his sorries, When Cheleptee surrendered, And we trembled as we wept.
For he tore our ranks asunder,
And he roared like the thunder, When the dove of peace he rendered, Less the empire that he kept.

For remember that our aim Is just to tread the path where fame Is, If bullets whistled gaily, And speculators' tongues dead, Don't forget we're only learning And suppose that awful yearning To send troops upon our daily With commands to shoot us dead.

The Red Corpse

By WEX JONES

WILLIAM SMITHSON OF BALLOON'S Nose Hatter writes a long letter containing the Red Corpse. There was some little fuss when the building was built from the plans following the ing, but in the interests of outward decor, the matter was quickly settled up, and I sold the design to the bill-board for $32,000, the low price being due to the fact that the elevated had been broken out of the building in transit.
Consequently the bill-board was already sold for $20,000, the difference being paid to me.

THE FATAL CAR
A tragedy of the bridge road.
The game was over. The beautiful girl at the second table appeared pale, but satisfied, as the winnings and losses were being reviewed.

With a strange look, the hostess said to her, "You are all right." The beautiful girl drew out her purse and counted over the bills in her hand. "I have only $20 here," she said in an expressive voice.

There was a long silence in the room.
Those at the other tables ceased their talks. The hostess turned a sickly yellow pale.

"The beautiful young girl seemed discon-solate of the result. 'But I will give you a check,' she continued." A look, as of disappointment, crossed her face. "I have no more money," she said. "I have no more money," she said.
